There was very little borrowing demand for stocks at the close of the market, the short interest having apparently been almost totally eliminated in the operations conducted at its expense during the forenoon, and no great confidence was felt that the market could resume its upward movement, since it no longer can make use of this factor. The Hill stocks were heavy, disappointment being felt over the statement of the Northern Pacific for June, which showed a deficit of more than $80,000, and on the completion of the covering by shorts other active stocks fell off, so that the closing prices were at or near the lowest of the day.
